Safari Park, Lebanon Safari Park, also known as Safari Park, is a park in Beirut, Lebanon. It is located at the intersections of Doueir/Chaoui Street and Raymond Ier Pacha Boulevard. History The land for Safari Park was purchased by two investors in 1987. They named it "Safari" because the lion is the national symbol of Lebanon. Over a three-year period, they worked to develop the park and keep it open during the Lebanese Civil War. Today, the park is open during the day and hosts weddings and corporate events. At night it is open to the public until midnight. It is located adjacent to the Beirut's major hotels, the Carlton, Four Seasons, and Sheraton, and has a capacity of 200 guests. The entrance to Safari Park is cordoned off with a security checkpoint. Once inside the gate, a second security check is done before visitors can enter the park itself. This second checkpoint has two factors: a body scanner and a metal detector. In the summer of 2013, the park was the target of three bombings. An Iranian-born Lebanese Shia, 17-year-old Abdul-Hadi Abdo Ghassali, was arrested by the Lebanese security forces on suspicion of carrying out the attacks.
